Leyendo el último Mensaje presentado por el General Juan Vicente Gómez, Presidente de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela, al la cultura y la civilización; y, Congreso Nacional, nos encontramos con la realidad de que este País, hasta ayer convertido en teatro de guerras, de hazañas imponentes; pero entre hermanos y dignos de mejores ideales; no obstante la onda de graves problemas en que están envueltos casi todos los grandes países, robustece su soberanía nacional con una Administración que serviría de modelo a los mejores estadistas. Una paz incomparable, porque el pueblo de Venezuela ha pasado en el transcurso de cinco lustros que su antaña colaboración en la anarquía y el desorden para el fragil triunfo de este o aquel ambicioso, no le produjo sino viudas y huérfanos; ruina y deshonra para su hogar, y a la Patria, decadencia y desredo.

EUROPE has many well-known men who sleep in them-kept cemeteries where the other 24,000 graves are white crosses "row on row" those of unknown soldiers—mark the graves of men men too badly wounded to be identified and men who but it has one graveyard, were laid in the ground in Redipuglia, Italy, where such haste and under such conditions of 30,000 soldiers that there was diers sleep beneath the no time to find out who they were or what company they belonged to.

Every year thousands of Italians visit the battlefield cemetery to wander over the rough ground and between the tangled strands of barbed wire believing that, somewhere beneath the soil lie the remains of fathers and sons and brothers listed in the records of their country as "lost in battle" or "missing without trace".

If such a cemetery can be said to be picturesque, then the bivouac of the heroic dead at Redipuglia, which lies between Goerz and Monfalcone, is picturesque. But to most of the thousands of people who visit the site every year, it is a dramatic and grim reminder of the futility of armed strife.

This cemetery has no rows of wooden or stone crosses. It has no sculptured monuments to the memory of the brave. Its tombstones are such familiar relics of war as airplane propellers, trench mortars, field kitchens, pieces of artillery, water carts, rifles, with bayonets "fixed" as they were when battle raged over this now silent stretch of ground, and "tin hats" battered by the blows of rifle butts and pierced by bullets.

Of these 30,000 graves, only 6,000 are identified with the names of the war equipment that are scattered over the many acres of this world-famous burial ground, the outstanding feature of the spot is a trench that cuts across the cemetery from one side to the other. This trench, except for the inevitable erosion wrought by weather and time, is exactly as it was some sixteen years ago when Italian soldiers put up a bitter fight to hold it against the advancing hordes of the enemy. Not a sand bag or a crude doorway to a dugout has been touched. A bristling barrier of barbed wire reaches from one end of the trench to the other.

In one corner of the burial ground stands what is left of a field gun that was struck by a shell and put out of commission during the battle that was fought here. On the breech of the big gun is a legend which reads: "I, too, have fought with fire, passion and feeling. I accompanied warriors into battle until

After the fall of the six wicket for the paltry amount of 14 runs, however, the batting improved considerably and the remaining batsmen brought the score to 51 for all.
